Certification & Competency Legend

Cells underneath the certification columns are colored according to the Certification Legend.

Green indicates that a certification is currently valid, blue indicates that a certification is due soon, yellow indicates that a certification is expiring soon (overdue), red indicates that a certification is expired (or is required with no prior completion on file), and white that a certification is not currently required.

The letters INH indicate that the due date associated with the credential is “Inherited from parent”, signaling the certification is tied to another certification’s due date.

The lock symbol indicates that a certification has Privacy Restrictions for the user in question.

If there is no information submitted for that Certification for the specified user, then the associated cell states “Nothing on file.”

If the certification does not apply to a particular user, that cell will not have any highlighting and contain a blue oval with the letters “NA” in white font.

When a user is in training, a blue circle containing a white number within it will indicate the number of days a credential has been deferred or the remaining number of days a user is in training.
